"As soon as Violet O'Halloran arrived at St. Dymphna's school and met the blind girl, Indira Sharma, I was captivated by this gorgeous and evocative novel. Regina McBride is a master of suspense and Stranger from Across the Sea is a deeply satisfying story."

Margot Livesey, New York Times bestselling author of The Road from Belhaven

"Stranger from Across the Sea is a tour de force. Captivating and enchanting, the book is a fierce and sensual story of mothers, daughters, friends, and lovers, set amidst generations of Irish struggles. Though the book is set on the rugged coastline of a small seaside village in Ireland, its stories come from as far as New York and India. Stranger from Across the Sea is a magical book. Brava, Regina McBride."

Patty Dann, author of The Wright Sister and Mermaids

"... this gorgeous, resonant novel of self-discovery and mystery in adolescence and womanhood centers on an unexpected connection and its impact over decades."

Editor's Pick, Publishers Weekly

"McBride's prose is ruminatively poetic and broodingly searching, and powerfully captures Violet's distress against the symbolically pregnant backdrop of Northern Ireland's political tumult. This is a deeply thoughtful work, elegiacally written and impressively sensitive."
